Keeping you safe: Enterprise trains Sailors about social media

USS ENTERPRISE, At sea - As USS Enterprise (CVN 65) prepares for its 21st deployment, Sailors aboard are receiving training on the importance of protecting personal information on social media websites in order to protect them and their family members.

Social media uses web-based technologies to turn communication into interactive dialogue, and it's everywhere these days. That also means the information posted on these sites is available to anyone, and with that comes the risk of identity theft and possible threats to home and family.

"My brief is to inform Sailors of what can and cannot be said in public forums," said Cryptologic Technician (Technical) 3rd Class Shea E. Martin, a command indoctrination course instructor. "They need to know, whether underway or in port, not to give out important information.

"Not watching what you say through e-mails could be potentially detrimental to Enterprise's mission," added Martin. "You never know what information other countries could intercept."

While Enterprise Sailors receive briefs on operational security, some Sailors have also had the opportunity for more interactive training on the risks associated with publicly available information. The Navy's Survival, Evasion, Resist and Escape (SERE) school prepares Sailors to survive in the event they are captured by the enemy, and teaches Sailors not to give out personal information. They learn first-hand how that information can be used as potential ammunition against them.

"During interrogation exercises, the instructors knew the names of Sailors' wives," said Naval Air Crewman 3rd Class Gray R. Harrison, assigned to the "Dragonslayers" of Helicopter Anti-Submarine Squadron (HS) 11. "They used it against them through fear of the safety of their family."

Even though Big 'E' Sailors may not find themselves in a situation where they're being interrogated, it is still important to stay in that mindset. Any information that is posted on a social media site could potentially be used to cause harm to loved ones.

To ensure the Sailors and their families are safe, the training makes Sailors aware that their audience is likely much greater than those with whom they are speaking, and to limit the amount of information they post about themselves and their loved ones. One never knows who is watching and collecting information.

Other topics that are addressed are profile security settings and the types of information that may be discussed, such as deployment dates, weapons information and lists of people with whom they serve.
